

I am outraged to hear that the federal government is trying to interfere with satellite radio. It provides not only entertainment but is critical to my daily life with weather reports and up to date information that I cannot get through traditional means. It should not be up to the national association of braodcasters who have ulterior motives(-i.e. greed) to determine what I can or cannot listen to. Radio has for so many years been such a horrible medium forcing inferior programming on people because of a monopoly on the airwaves. Finally someone decided to provide real service and entertainment and those very people who have sought to provide that inferior product now want to regulate? This isn't Russia, is it? Sure feels like it. Keep their hands off my XM!
